Sea Lavender

(mackerel, cauliflower, radish)

As kids, we spent time in the picturesque village of Noss Mayo in Devon, which had a harbour and estuary that went to the sea. We'd often sail in my father's Drascombe Lugger called "Sea Lavender" casting feathered lines out for mackerel, which were abundant.

I have always been fascinated by the magic of the sea which taught me to respect the frail balance it is now in. Most importantly, it taught me to know my product and its source.

The versatility in cooking and adaptability to many flavours make the humble leek one of Pierre Koffman's favourite vegetable. It goes effortlessly from soft and subtle to big and bold. Ours is a happy medium of both worlds intertwined.

A meaning to be well prepared or well organized for something that is about to happen. A kitchen must run like a clockwork with all the little gears in motion, working in perfect harmony. Here we have 3 different servings of duck with 3 distinct flavours.
